内容概要

Patent activity from big corporations and homegrown inventors alike is booming in the United States; alongside all this patent activity is a surge in complicated legal action involving patents, copyrights, trademarks, and trade secrets. In the headlines everyday are patent lawsuits with big names such as BlackBerry®; (RIMM), eBay, Procter & Gamble, and Coca-Cola involved in big lawsuits, with big money—and big ideas—at stake. Edited by Daniel Slottje, a leading litigation consultant, Economic Damages in Intellectual Property: A Hands-On Guide to Litigation is a timely guidebook filled with insightful contributions from experts—including intellectual property (IP) professionals, attorneys, economics professors, certified public accountants, and other damages professionals. Intelligent and revealing, these insiders shed authoritative light on how to quantify damages in litigation matters involving IP. Thoroughly researched and practical, this guide presents indispensable analysis of cases providing information on how economic analysis in support of IP litigation matters is performed and how that information can be disseminated for a better understanding of the case at hand. This important book provides IP professionals and lawyers with comprehensive coverage of: Patent, copyright, and trademark cases and economic damages Economic principles applied to IP litigation Lost profit analysis Reasonable royalty analysis Economic damage quantification Evaluation of damage claims in trade secrets cases Quantification of damages Commonly debated issues in performing economic damages analyses in intellectual property matters With real-world case studies involving well-known companies to help make the concepts clear and accessible, Economic Damages in Intellectual Property: A Hands-On Guide to Litigation demystifies this process towards an understanding of how damages are calculated and how that information can be used in cases of all types. 作者简介：DANIEL SLOTTJE is a Senior Managing Director in FTI Consulting Inc.'s Forensic and Litigation Consulting practice, and provides consulting services to clients in various industries.
