章节摘录

An essay : also called a theme or a composition , refers to a variety of nonfiction prose of varying length and purpose , whose common aim is usually to express a writer ' s viewpOint Or reasoned opinion on a topic .

The structure of an essay on the page is as follows : title , introduction : body : and conclusion . Notice that the title is the first thing written on the page of an essay . It is written in the upper part of the page and centered .

Writers of books and essays need to come up with an idea about something when they set out to write. When they have those two things , a subject and an idea about that subject . they have what's commonly known as a thesis , or a main idea . The subject " Tourism Industry " , for instance , just can't serve as the thesis of an essay because it is too broad . But " The History of Tourism Industry " or " The Influence of Market Economy on Tourism Industry " or " Is Tourism Expanding After China's Entry into WTO ?

" all make fine essay titles . A title should have the following functions : It should show what the essay is about ; It should arouse the interest in the essay ; It should be brief ; It is often a sentence fragment . As it points out , a standard composition consists of three main parts : introduction ( the opening part ) , body ( the developing part ) and conclusion ( the closing part ) .
