章节摘录

The man looks uncomfortable. He is not speaking. His girlfriend keeps asking him, “ What's wrong ? Nothing. ” he replies each time. You must be familiar with this kind of scene. Romantic comedies and TV dramas often show this kind of relationship problem. Such problems among couples often result from not understanding their partner's communication style. Psychologists have found some basic differences between the sexes in the ways that they communicate. Firstly, women typically prefer to talk about their feeling, while men tend to withdraw. For example, when a couple has a problem, a woman will typically try to solve the problem by talking about it with her partner. A man, on the other hand, is usually more inclined to solve the problem alone. He therefore removes himself from the situation, or tries to get away from the woman to be by himself. Secondly, men and women respond to each other differently. Both men and women are very good at reading their partners' feelings. The difference is in their reactions. Women, psychologists say, are receptive and responsive. This means that they actually feel what their partner is feeling. In contrast, men understand their partners' feelings, but don't actually feel them themselves. For example, if a woman is stressed, her partner will recognize it but won't become stressed.
