章节摘录

With the above mentioned two perspectives in mind , a tentative study is devised to investigate learners language. Larsen-Freeman once pointed out We do not communicate through reference to prior , fixed abstract forms but rather we create Language as we go , both individually and as communities. (2003 : 47) Language communication always involves a kind of creativity. In 2007 , there was a recent refocused interest in the research of language creativity , and the reach of the research area has been expanded into a number of new areas , some prototypical , some less salient in the field of applied linguistics benefiting from this renewal of attention. The precise term creativity is not always used in all these contexts and Cook (2000) and others have , for example , developed rich notions of language play , which are also especially helpful in extending discussion in relation to language learning and teaching (Carter , 2007) .
