It deals with politics, history, arts, garden design, customs and other things, showing how widely and deeply culture permeated life. It can justly be called an encyclopedia of old China. Cao Xueqin, its author, devotes nearly one third of its length to describing daily life in an extravagant noble family. According to one statistic, the book deals with 186 kinds of delicious foods. Sister Liu, a cook employed by the Jia family in their Grand View Garden, says: "Every dish available under the sun is written on the menu board in the kitchen, and they are eaten by turns." A smart entrepreneur in Beijing designed "Red Mansion Dinners" based on descriptions in the novel and these have been served to tens of thousands of Chinese and foreign diners.
