<<中国思想发展史>>

内容概要

This book systematically introduces the development of Chinese thought from the pre Qin Dynasty period (before 221 BC) to the beginning of the 20th century, summarizing the heritage and development of different ways of thought at different times. Using clear language to explain important philosophical ideas which have made significant impacts on China, the book expounds on the profound nature of Chinese thought and culture over the past 3,000 years. Apart from philosophical and political ideas, the book also makes systematic analyses of the economic ideas, scientific ideas, historical ideas, literary ideas and revolutionary ideas of the Chinese people epoch by epoch, providing a comprehensive and deep understanding of Chinese thought and culture.

章节摘录

Chapter 2 IDEOLOGY IN THE WARRING STATES PERIOD (I) 1 . IDEOLOGY OF THE EARLY MOHIST
The great social upheaval taking place during the transitional period from the Spring and Autumn Period to the Warring States Period (6th-5th century B . C .) brought about a great change in class relationship . Schools and doctrines representing interests of different classes , strata and groups all swarmed to the forefront . The rising landlord class, in order to consolidate its rule , professed itself the representative of all the people , but it never did nor could represent the interests of the labourers . In the time of the Warring States , the schools that reflected the interests of the labouring people were the Mohist School founded by Mo Zi , the school of Yang Zhu and the Agricultural (or Physioerat) School headed by Xu Xing . Owing to the differences in the classes , strata and groups they represented , these schools differed from one another in their theories as well as in their practices . Roughly speaking , the Mohist School was the ideological representative of the small craftsmen , the school of Yang Zhu was that of the small land proprietors and the Agricultural School was that of the poor peasants .
