章节摘录

The Reform of the United Nations It ' S a pleasure for me to be here . I ' d like to share my thoughts on the reform of the United Nations . I think the UN should initiate reform in two ways , SO as to create a more positive environment for its (1) effective functioning . First , the authority of the General Assembly needs to be enhanced as the focus of efforts to strengthen the UN . In the UN Charter , the Security Council is given primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security ; it is the only organ whose decisions are legally binding on member states (Articles 24 ~ 25) . In actuality , however , the veto power granted only to the five permanent members prevents the Council from fulfilling its function when agreement cannot be reached . In order to overcome the Security Council ' S (2) limitations , it is essential to empower the General Assembly through strengthening both its structures and practices . The UN Charter stipulates that the General Assembly ' S responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security is subordinate to that of the Security Council . But as a global forum for dialogue open to all member states , the General Assembly is uniquely representative of the members ' views . There is a body of precedent for the General Assembly meeting in emergency special session and making recommendations to member states when the Security Council fails to fulfill its primary responsibility due , for example , to the exercise of the veto . This process was established by the " Uniting for Peace " resolution adopted by the General Assembly in 1950 , which enables emergency special sessions to be called by a vote of any nine members of the Security Council , or by a majority of the UN member states . In the twenty-first century , the UN must be capable of fully (3) representing and reflecting the views of the international community in searching for the most appropriate means of resolving problems . The practice of holding emergency special sessions of the General Assembly should be encouraged , and routes established by which their deliberations can be fed back to the Security Council . This will provide a broader basis for making the difficult decisions needed to meet the new types of threat to peace that have emerged in recent years . It is understood that the strength and authority of the UN lie in its ability to build consensus within the international community . While measures to counter threats to peace and security must be effective , even more crucially they must be seen as having legitimacy , which is in turn the basis for soft power . My second proposal for institutional reform concerns the need to coordinate and integrate the strategies and activities of the UN agencies that provide different forms of (4) support for people and societies caught up in violent conflict . This must cover the entire process from the start of conflict to postconflict (5) peace-building activities . When a conflict happens , all actors must work under a unified leadership and focus on the needs of people and societies afflicted by the ravages of conflict . There is an increasingly urgent need to develop a comprehensive framework for relief activities to respond to conflicts of an ever more complex nature . I believe that a body should be created within the UN to take effective international leadership for this particular challenge . Specifically , the Trusteeship Council , which has suspended operations could be reconstituted as a " peace rehabilitation council " to assume this responsibility . In order to strengthen the UN , popular (6) engagement and support are essential - at least as important as the efforts of member states . The world body has been suffering from (7) financial constraints for many years , and support in a wider range of areas is : required . There have , of course , been positive developments . For example , more and more people have come to the terms of the importance of the interaction between civil society and the UN . I believe that the involvement of the NGOs and (8) civil societies will help strengthen the capacity of the UN to contribute to peace in the new era . Complementing these suggestions for UN reform , I would also like to stress the importance of fostering a global environment in which : conflict is resolved through the rule of law . It is crucially important to create , through an international network of cooperation and with an emphasis on preventive measures . The International Criminal Court (ICC) needs to be central to this process . Officially launched by the swearing , in of its judges in March 2003 , the (10) ICC is the first permanent international criminal court established to try individuals for war crimes , genocide or crimes against humanity . It is important to increase the number of states participating in the ICC and encourage its effective functioning . The ICC can help sever the cycles of hatred and violence that drive conflict and terror . It can contribute to establishing a (9) culture of resolving conflicts through recourse to law rather than resort to force . After the bombing of the UN headquarters in Baghdad last August , the Security Council adopted a resolution expressing strong condemnation of terror against : UN personnel and . humanitarian relief workers in zones of conflict , identifying these acts as war crimes . Also in this connection it is necessary to reinforce International Humanitarian Law which was developed to define the legally acceptable behavior of combatants in wartime . This is needed to respond to new types of conflict , such as civil wars that spill over international borders , and to ensure that counter-terrorism measures are conducted in accord with the spirit of humanitarian law .
