章节摘录

Fund transfer arrangement via banks is an essential part of daily banking options. Nowadays, with the development of interbank electronics, electronic funds transfer becomes the most noteworthy feature of today's financial services industry. EFTs use a variety of systems and technologies to transfer funds electronically (rather by check or cash) among various bank accounts. They move money between accounts in a fast, secure, less expensive and paperless way. The remitting bank, at the request of a remitter, sends the required funds to a remittee or beneficiary by the means instructed by the remitter, through a paying bank (its overseas branch or its corresponding bank). Usually there are four parties involved in the remittance. 1) A remitter, also called the payer, is the person who requires his bank to remit funds to a remittee in other place or a foreign country. 2) A remittee, also called the beneficiary, is the person who is addressed to receive the remittance, 3) A remitting bank is the bank transferring funds at the request of a remitter through its branch or correspondent bank and instructing the latter to pay a certain sum of money to a remittee or a beneficiary. 4) A drawee bank is the bank entrusted by the remitting bank to pay a certain sum of money to a remittee or a beneficiary named in the remittance advice.
