内容概要

A financial crisis is spreading across the globe and having a tremendous impact on the world economy and financial system. Learning lessons from this crisis is a crucial task faced by the government and scholars in China. It is important to further analyze the following related theoretical issues: the root causes of this worldwide financial crisis, the relationship between the real economy and the virtual economy, the reform of the international monetary system, the reestablishment of international financial order, financial innovation and regulation, the balance between government intervention and free market principle, the reasons why investment banks failed, high financial leverage, the future of asset-securitization, and the alternative targets for monetary policy.

2.The Design of a National Unified Retirement System 2.1 Basic theory Regarding the design of a retirement security system, the International Labor Organization and the World Bank suggest that the fundamental objective of a public pension system is to ensure old age security and to reduce old-age poverty. The farther objective is to provide an income-replacing benefit in retirement. To achieve the goals, the system should, in principle, include the income redistribution to promote the social equitable, should engage the responsibilities of government, employer, the family and the individual, should try to meet different level's retirement demands. Apparently, the system should be a multi-pillar system. The most basic pillar should cover all citizens, eliminate old-age poverty and offer basic income security to the elderly. And on a higher level, other pillars should provide the adequate retirement benefit and ensure unreduced living standard for old age. According to the basic principles discussed above, China's pension system should be a multi-pillar one, should cover whole citizen to prevent poverty. Meanwhile, the system should have incentive mechanism to encourage individuals and families to participate and to meet hierarchy of retirement needs.
