章节摘录

Wind , cold , summer-heat , dampness , dryness , and heat (fire) are six kinds of natural climatic factors known as “ six qi ” .Under normal condition , the human body can adapt to the changes of climate which are indispensable to the existence of human beings. If the harmonious relationship between human beings and nature is broken , the body is unable to adapt itself to the change of the climate , leading to the occurrence of disease. Under such a condition , these six natural climatic factors become pathogenic factors. The six abnormal climatic factors. known as six evils , are pathogenic wind , pathogenic cold , pathogenic summer-heat , pathogenic dampness , pathogenic dryness , and pathogenic heat (fire) . ” The six abnormal climatic factors are characterized by the following features in causing disease. Firstly , the cause of disease by the six abnormal climatic factors is usually related to seasonal changes and living conditions. For example , pathogenic wind prevails in spring and consequently people tend to be affected by pathogenic wind in spring , while pathogenic cold is prevalent in winter and people tend to be affected by pathogenic cold in winter. Secondly , the six abnormal climatic factors may singly or collectively attack people. For example , pathogenic wind may combine with cold , dampness , dryness and heat to attack people and lead to wind-cold syndrome , wind-dampness syndrome , wind-dryness syndrome and wind heat syndrome. Thirdly , the nature of the diseases caused by the six abnormal climatic factors may change. For example , invasion of pathogenic cold may deepen internally to transform into heat and accumulation of pathogenic dampness also may transform into heat. Finally , the six abnormal climatic factors usually invade people from the skin into the muscle or from the mouth and nose into the lung and the defensive phase. Besides , clinically there are some diseases due to dysfunction of Viscera that appear similar to the pathological changes caused by pathogenic wind , pathogenic cold , pathogenic dampness , pathogenic dryness , and pathogenic heat (fire) , known as five endogenous pathogenic factors.
