章节摘录

版权页：插图： He had a definite idea of where Hecklin rived-on a hill overlooking Ketchikan.It was an imposing residence visible from the water and locally referred to as "the house in the mist" due to the habit of the fog and rain coming just low enough,at times,to give the place a spectral~ appearance.The house was close to and about on a level with the top of the radio station's antenna mast. Norton went along the upper road,crossing Fish Creek above the city's questionable district of Indian Town and passing by the park.It was a constant upgrade.The houses thinned out.An arch~ at the foot of an upward-vanishing flight of wooden steps was the entrance to the Hecklin home.Norton climbed up,pausing every landing to look ahead and behind,aware of a certain atmosphere~ in this place.After a considerable climb he saw that the house above was glaringly~ righted and heard excited voices emanating from it. Below,brakes yelped and two doors slammed.Several footbeats made the long stairway shake.Norton sped on ahead and dived off into the bushes at a landing in time to let Chief of Porice Danton,Kelly and a doctor leap upward and by. Amazed,Norton swiftly but unobtrusively followed in their wake.
