<<制度适宜与经济发展>>

前言

Over the past decade , I have been preoccupied with the wish to sum-marize the successful experience of the reform and opening-up in China and then abstract it into a kind of theory SO that it can make its due contribution to human development . The Chinese nation , with a history of civilization lasting for over five thousand years , is said to boast the only uninterrupted civilization in the human society . When I visited the Yin Ruins in Anyang of Henan , the “ Emperor ’ S Chariot Drawn by Six Steeds ” in Luoyang . the Terracotta Warriors of Xi ’ an , and the Sanxingdui Ruins and the Jinsha Ruins on the Chengdu Plain ; when I read about major archeological discoveries such as the Jade Clothes Sewn With Gold Thread in Mancheng of Hebei , the Buddhist remains of the underground palace in the Famen Temple of Xi ’ an , the bamboo slips of the Qin Dynasty in Liye of Hunan and the ancient corpse in Jinzhou of Hubei that remains unrotten for a thousand years . I was driven by an impulse , an impulse that brought tears into my eyes : how splendid and magnificent the five thousand-year Chinese civilization is ! Perhaps the influence of the Chinese civilization on the ancient society of mankind has not been fully unveiled , perhaps the obstruction of high mountains and vast oceans has prevented the spread of the impact that should have been felt , or perhaps the wars and natural disasters in the past several hundred years or one thousand years have annihilated those records . This time , however , we should not allow the spread of the Chinese civilization to be obstructed for another time . With the support of modern science and technology , the valuable experience of the reform and opening——up as well as the development in China should be shared by all mankind . If we failed to carefully summarize this experience , we would be unworthy of the Chinese civilization with a history of five thousand years and be unworthy of our ancestors . That would be my lifelong regret!
