章节摘录

插图：The applicant is refused to board or enter China because of invalid visa caused by application too early or too late; The visa expires for the personal reason of the applicant or third party; The applicant is refused to board or enter China because he or she does not check his or her visa validity term, number of entries, term of stay or passport validity term before visiting China; The visa is not available due to other personal reasons of the applicant.

4. How to Interpret Your Chinese Visa

(1) Number of Entries

The Number of Entries refers to the maximum times that you can enter China within the validity term of your visa. The visa will automatically terminate when the times you enter China reach the limit. You are required to apply for a new visa if you want to enter China once again. Also, a new visa is required if it expires, even when the times you enter China do not reach the limit. The holder will be refused to enter China if his or her visa has exceeded the limit. So, remember to check the Number of Entries and the Validity Term of your visa before visiting China.

(2) Visa Validity Term

Validity shown as "Enter before" on visa refers to the time limit of visa. Visa holders must use the visa to enter China before 24:00 on the exact day of expiration, otherwise, visa expires after time limit and cannot be extended no matter whether there is number of entry left, and reapplication of visa is required. The visa becomes valid since the day of issuance, and the applicant shall bear the consequence of invalid visa for the reasons of the applicant or the third party. The holder of invalid or expired visa will be refused to enter China. It is suggested to check the validity to assure the visa is good to be used before setting out for China.

(3) Duration of Each Stay

Duration of Each Stay refers to the maximum number of days visa holder is permitted to stay in China each time, which is counted from the date of entry. If extension of the duration of stay is needed, applicants should apply for a new visa at local public security authorities before visa expires. Over staying is against the Chinese laws and regulations, punishments such as fines or even expulsion will be made, therefore, it is suggested to check visa to avoid overstaying.
