章节摘录

The "standard of living" of any country means the average persons share of the goods and serv-ices which the country produces. A countrys standard of living, therefore, depends first and foremoston its capacity to produce wealth. "Wealth" in this sense is not money, for we do not live on moneybut on things that money can buy: "goods" such as food and clothing, and "services" such as trans-port and entertainment. A countrys capacity to produce wealth depends upon many factors, most of which have an effecton one another. Wealth depends to a great extent upon a countrys natural resources, such as coal, gold, and other minerals, water supply and so on. Some regions of the world are well supplied withcoal and minerals, and have a fertile soil and a favorable climate while other regions possess none of them. Next to natural resources comes the ability to turn them to use. Some countries are perhaps welloff in natural resources, but suffered for many years from civil and external wars, and for this andother reasons have been unable to develop their resources. Sound and stable political conditions andfreedom from foreign invasion enable a country to develop its natural resources peacefully and steadi-ly, and to produce more wealth than another country equally well served by nature but less well or-dered. Another important factor is the technical efficiency of a countrys people. Industrialized coun-tries that have trained numerous skilled workers and technicians are better placed to produce wealththan countries whose workers are largely unskilled.
