章节摘录

There are many charity shops in England. They are owned and run by Oxfam and other charities. Sometimes all their money goes to help cure a particular disease such as cancer. Some other charities use their profits to help young homeless people. A charity shop sells many things. For example, you find clothes, board games, china and books there. These second hand items are given to the shops by people who don't need them any more. A family might give old clothes that they wear no more or books that they no longer read to a charity shop. The charity shop doesn't pay for these items. The charity shop then sells these goods at a very low price. People often go to these shops to find a bargain. Of course most things in shops are not very interesting, but books and clothes in these shops can be very cheap and very good. The money gained from selling these things is then used by the charity to help people in need. For example, Oxfam uses its money to help poor people all over the world, especially in Africa. It provides life-saving medical care and food. It also uses its money to make people know the suffering of the poor around the world so that they can receive more donations to help more people.
