章节摘录

Besides their habit of changing addresses, Americans are used to traveling. Some people make long-distance commutes to work daily. Their jobs may even require them to take frequent business trips. Most companies provide an annual vacation for their employees, and people often use that time to travel. Some people just visit friends or relatives in distant states, while others go on low-budget weekend excursions and stay in economy motels. Those with more expensive tastes choose luxurious resorts and hotels. Camping out in the great outdoors appeals to adventurous types. Some travel in recreational vehicles (RVs) to camp out in comfort, while others "rough it" by sleeping in tents. Most Americans prefer to travel within their nation's borders. Why?

For one thing, it's cheaper than traveling abroad and there's no language problem. But besides that, the vast American territory offers numerous tourist attractions. The country is divided into fifty states including Alaska and Hawaii overseas. The natural reserves cover around 10% of the territory of the country and natural wonders are everywhere. Tourism is also concentrated in metropolises, historical sites and national parks. Nature lovers can enjoy beaches, mountains, canyons, lakes and a wealth of natural wonders while major cities offer visitors a multitude of urban delights. The convenience of modern freeways, railways and airplanes makes travel in America as easy as pie. Many American vacations are as unique as the people who take them. Families often plan their trips with the kids in mind. More and more "family friendly" vacation resorts offer special programs for children. History buffs seek out famous historical sites and museums. Environmentalists prefer "green vacations." These trips allow them to observe flora and fauna up-close without disturbing the sensitive balance of nature. Some people find sea cruises relaxing and refreshing, others hit the water to go fishing, skiing or white-water rafting. Daring souls get the thrill of a lifetime on trekking expeditions and safaris in remote places from Africa to Asia. ....
