章节摘录

版权页：插图： Zhejiang is located in the southern wing of the Yangtze River Delta on the southeastern coasts of China, bordering Shanghai, the country's largest city, in the north, and the expansive Pacific Ocean in its east. The provincial capital city of Hangzhou is linked with Shanghai by expressway of about 150 kilometers. The province covers a total continental area of 101,800 square kilometers, and has a total sea area reaching 260,000 square kilometers. The continental coastline and the island shoreline totals 6,600 kilometers, accounting for 21% of the country's entire coastline. The province has the largest number of islands and islets in the country, among which 2,878 islands and islets have an area of more than 500 square meters each. The sea areas of the province have the capacity for construction of up to one hundred 100,000-tonnage deep-water berths, ranking first in China. Zhejiang was listed one of the sites for the state-level pilot project of ocean economic development in 2010.
