章节摘录

Passage A Meridians and Collaterals The meridians and collaterals are distributed a1]over the human body , Linking the interi-or Zang-fu organs to the various tissues and organs of the super portion of the body to makethe body an organic integrity , and transporting Qi and blood in order to nourish the wholebody.In the network of the meridians and collaterals , the meridians are the main trunks thatpertain to the respective Zang-fu organs , while the collaterals are their minor branches dis-tributed over the entire body. The system of meridians and collaterals mainly consists of the twelve regular meridians , the eight extra meridians and the fifteen collaterals.The twelve regular meridians , togetherwith Ren meridian and Du meridian of the eight extra meridians form the fourteen meridians , along each of which are points for applying acupuncture and moxibustion. The complete name of each of the twelve regular meridians is composed of three parts : ( 1 ) hand or foot , ( 2 ) Yin or rang ( Yin is further divided into Taiyin , Shaoyin and Jueyin , and rang into Taiyang. Yangming and Shaoyang ) , and ( 3 ) a Zang or a Fu organ.The handor foot in the name of a meridian depends on whether the meridian goes mainly on the handor the foot ' while Yin or Yang and a Zang or a Fu organ are determined by whether it takesits course along the medial or the lateral aspect of the limb ' and which Zang or Fu organ it pertains to.

For instance , the meridian which goes mainly on the hand ' runs along the medial aspect of theupper limb and pertains to the lung , is named the Lung meridian of Hand-Taiyin. The eight extra meridians are the Du , Ren , Chong , Dai , Yangqiao , Yinqiao Yangweiand Yinwei meridians.Their courses of distribution are different from those of the twelveregular meridians and they do not pertain to or connect with Zang-fu organs.

Each of the names of the eight extra meridians conveys special meaning : Du means gov-erning ; that is to say , the Du meridian has the function of governing all the Yang meridians. Ren means responsibility ; that is , the Ren meridian is responsible for all the Yin meridians.Chong means vital ; that is , the Chong meridian is a vital meridian communicating with allthe meridians.Dai is a girdle , which implies that the Dai meridian has the function of bindingup all the meridians. ....
