章节摘录

That is why Grandma never saw my parents after that. She said that when she remarried she told my dad that his wedding would be the last time they would meet. Can you imagine how I felt in that luxurious car, listening to the mean things my dad had done to my grandma?

I was so uneasy. To be fair, my grandma was lucky to marry their father. If she hadn't been able to find a good husband when she was driven out by her own son I might have lost her many years ago. Grandma's ashes will be with me wherever I go. From that time on, I hated to go home, especially to see my dad. He didn't know Grandma had died, since I didn't tell him. I wondered when he, her son, could have a moment to think about his own mother. Finally he thought of her, because of her apartment. My girlfriend came to my home sometimes after I got a job. My parents approved of our relationship. Once we were having dinner together, and Mum said a neighbor had had a baby. "When can I become a grandma?" she asked. I hated to listen to her talking like that. I was sensitive about this matter, since I was thinking of my grandma. I had been born in that apartment, and had a room of my own. It seemed we were a perfect family. But what was the cost?

My grandma had to remarry at such an advanced age. Even though she was well treated, she had to attend upon another family. It made me sad whenever I thought of it. My girlfriend went away after dinner once, and Dad was cleaning the table. Mum said, "She has to come and go like that. How tiring!

Why don't you two get married?

You can live in the big room, and your dad and I can sleep in the small room. When you have enough money to buy a big apartment you can move out, and we can stay here and look after your child." Mum liked gabbing, so I kept silent. Suddenly Dad said, "Your grandma has an apartment. Her husband is dead.

Their struggles and trials , successes and failures , strike a chord in the hearts of Ordinary people just like Us. And since they are still struggling and trying , and may still fail , we can learn from them , and draw courage and strength from their stories as we identify with them. They are like mirrors which enable us to see ourselves in them. —An Dun
