章节摘录

The Seattle Times Company is the newspaper firm that has recognized the need for change and done something about it. In the newspaper industry, papers must reflect the diversity of the communities to which they provide information. It must reflect that diversity with their news coverage or risk losing their reader's interest and their advertisers' support. Operating within Seattle, which has 20 percents racial minorities, the paper has put into place policies and procedures for hiring and maintain a diverse workforce. The underlying reason for the change is that for information to be fair, appropriate, and subjective, it should be reported by the same kind of population that reads it. A diversity committee composed of reporters, editors, and photographers meets regularly to value the Seattle Times' content and to educate the rest of the news room staff about diversity issues.
