<<人类的艺术>>

内容概要

Upon that much we can probably agree without anyfurther argument. But when I say, "Art is universal,"there is an immediate danger that you will think of art(of either music or painting or sculpture or dancing) as if it were somesort of universal language, understood by everybody in every part ofthe world. Which of course is not true at all. What happens to be the mostsublime form of music Io me, who am sitting at my desk upstairs-sayBach's Fugue in G minor-is just so much unpleasant noise to my poorwife, who within a few minutes will be copying these pagesdownstairs, far removed from the gramophone and the fiddle.

章节摘录

插图: The music of johann Sebastian Bach was a matter of constant imtation to his employers in Leipzig. The Emperorjoseph ii of Austria complained to Herr Mozart that there were "too many notes" in his music. Richard Wagner scompositions were hooted off the concert platform. Arab or Chinese music, that makes the average Arab or Chinese roll his eyes in deep rapture, happens to affect me personally as ifl were listening to a bitterly contested cat fight in the neighbor's back yard. Wherefore, when I say that art is uruversal, I merely mean that art is not bound to any particular country or to any particular period of time. For art is as old as the human race and it is just as much part of man as are his eyes or his ears or his hunger or his thirst. The lowest savage of the most desolate part of Australia, who in a great many ways is quite inferior to the animals which share his loneliness, who has never even learned how to build himself a house or how to wear clothes, had developed a very interesting art of his own. And while we have discovered several groups of natives who have no conception whatsoever of religion, we have never, as far as I know, come across a race (no matter how far it happened to be removed from the center of civilization) that was completely without some form of artistic expression.
