章节摘录

版权页： The fourth measure is to build a party with close link to the people. The close link to the people is the most significant political advantage of our Party. With the development of the times and the progress of technologies, our Party has been unremittingly explored the new methods and channels to enhance our communication with the people. For example, we have opened message boards on the Internet, on which Internet users can directly interact with central leaders and heads of the central government organs, and express their opinion and suggestions. The e-mail addresses and telephone numbers of provincial, municipal, and local level officials are publicized so that people can report issues at any time. In 2010, we developed the concept of "innovative social management," and later included it in The Outline of the 12th Five-Year Plan. This concept focuses on the important role of the primary level Party organizations, further improvement of the working style of the Party, and closer relationship between the Party and the people. The fifth measure is to build a clean and uncorrupted party. Keeping the cadres clean and uncorrupted is one of important experiences in maintaining the support of the people. We have forcefully perfected the relevant laws and regulations. In the year 2010 alone, we have put forward a series of laws and a regulation, including The Code of Ethics for Cadres of the Communist Party of China, which specifically provides that eight kinds of behavior are "prohibited and further details them to 52 actions that are "not allowed." The document also requires that leading Party cadres report personal information about family possession and family members, and intensifies and expands the audit on the economic responsibilities of major leaders of the Party and government, and the heads of state-owned enterprises. We have also strengthened our efforts to encourage public supervision and whistle-blowing by opening up hotlines and websites for reporting in the disciplinary and supervisory departments all over the country.
