章节摘录

版权页： 3. Legal Basis of the Delegation of Certain Military Legislative Power The Legislation Law authorizes the People's Congress and its Standing Committee of provincial, autonomous regions, municipalities directly under the Central Government and major city level power to promulgate local regulations and their administrative branch rules within statutory region. (Article 63 and Article 72) The law also emphasizes that the content of such rules and regulations should lie within the authority of its maker, and at the same time corresponds with the spirit of laws and administrative regulations promulgated by National People's Congress and State Council. According to Article 107 of the Constitution, local people's government above county level are entitled to "administrate the economic, educational, scientific, cultural, hygiene, gymnastic, urban and rural construction, fiscal, people's affair, public security, ethnic, judicifia, family planning work, and other related work by making decisions and issuing orders. " Though no direct reference of the word "national defense" in plaintext, it is partial to say the least if we are to exclude national defense from the local government's built-in functions. According to Law of People's Republic of China on National Defense, the definition of "national defense activity" consists of not only military campaign, but also paramilitary activities including related political, economical, scientific, and even educational affairs. These paramilitary activities are, to a great extent, within the responsibility of the government's administration spectrum, and therefore should be classified as the government's national defense responsibilities. When discussing whether local governments should have military legislative power, we should draw our attention to the duality of this particular power, keeping in mind that it consists of two parts, viz. national defense legislation and legislation in the army. "National defense legislation refers specially to the making of national defense laws and regulations by legislature of state (the National People's Congress and its standing committee) and state government agency (the State Council), while legislation in the army refers to authorized military institutions' activity of issuing military rules and regulations. " As a result, military legislative power can be divided correspondingly into two parts--army legislative power and national defense legislative power.
