章节摘录

版权页：插图：The naturalists are very knowledgeable and are eager to explain every detail of topography, geology and zoology. They'll tell you that the Galapagos Islands were made famous when Charles Darwin visited in the nineteenth century to study their rich variety of wildlife. Coming face-to-face with hundred-year-old turtles is a humbling and awe-inspiring experience, but that is just the beginning. You'll be thrilled to watch blue-footed boobies soar elegantly into the air and the tortoise do dive in groups into the ocean. See a cormorant hanging itself out to dry. Watch the red-billed tropicbird play hit and miss finding its tiny home along the cliff. Witness the flirty, funny courtship dance of the waved albatross and watch as male frigate birds inflate their enormous bright red pouches to attract mates. The Galapagos are a bird-lover's dream because here the birds show no fear. You can walk right up to them and observe their most intimate behaviors. The islands are rightfully proud of their location on the equator. You're mesmerized if you imagine it to be oppressively hot. The weather can get hot in the afternoon but is mostly dry and temperate. Rarely does it rain, and the evening brings with it a pleasant, cool breeze. Ecuador itself boasts so many climates from the Andes~ to the coast to the rainforest to the islands. On any given day, you can ski in the morning and swim with sea lions in the afternoon.
