章节摘录

插图： Historical Background Information Ziggurats were steep towers built as dwelling places for the gods. They were not used as places of worship or for ceremonies. Instead, the Mesopotamians believed that if the gods lived in the ziggurats, they would be close to humankind. Ziggurats were built in tiers, with each tier getting smaller as the buildings went upward. The bases of ziggurats were rectangular, oval, or square. Only priests were allowed inside ziggurats. It was the responsibility of the priests to tend to the needs of the gods. One of the best-preserved ziggurats is Choqa Zanbil. This ziggurat is located in modern-day Iran. It was built in 1250 B.C. by King Untash Napir. Today, it is 82 feet ( 25 meters ) high. But in Untash Napir's days, it is believed to have been about 170 feet ( 52 meters ) tall. Though in ruins, it still survived an eight-year war between Iraq and Iran in the 1980s when many other archeological sites were destroyed.
