章节摘录

There are several different kinds of wall in any building. All of them have different functions within the building. The function of a wall affects the way that it is built and the material that it is made of. There are basically two types of wall in any building. Firstly there are walls which are designed to support the weight of roof , floors and other walls. Secondly there are walls which are designed to separate the building into rooms and which only have to support their own weight. If a wall is on the outside of a building it will have to be insulated so that cold or heat cannot enter the building through the wall. It may also have to be insulated against noise so that external sounds cannot be heard in the building.
