章节摘录

As society advances, many kinds of crimes have been increasing day by day. They can take place in any city and penetrate every corner of society. The most common crimes directly threatening people are burglary and street crime. But crimes vary in different cities, and in different countries. In some big cities of America, street crime is a constant threat to society, while in our country, burglary is usually a big problem. These kinds of crimes and the fear they cause are changing the fabric of society and forcing its citizens to change their traditional patterns. In some cities of America, no one dares to leave home at night; no one feels secure even in his or her own neighborhood. And in many cities of our country, even those who live on the 6th floor have to make their home a "bird cage" with barred windows around it. Under such circumstances, what can we do to make our cities cleaner and safer? What can we do to help the young to stay away from crime? To solve these problems, greater efforts must be made by the government and all citizens.
