章节摘录

A few months ago , it wasnt unusual for 47-year-old Carla To be to spend 15 hours per day online. She wake up early , turn on her laptop and chat on Internet dating sites and instant-messaging programs——leaving her bed for only brief intervals .Her household bills piled up , along with the dishes and dirty laundry , but it took near-constant complaints from her four daughters before she realized she had a problem. “ I was starting to feel like my whole world was falling apart——kind of slipping into a de pression , ” said Carla. “ I knew that if don ’ t get off the dating sites , I ’ d just keep going , ” detaching (使脱离) herself further from the outside world.

Toe be conclusion : She felt like she was “ addicted ” to the Internet. She is not alone. Concern about excessive Internet use isnt new .As far back as 1995。 articles in medical journals and the establishment of a Pennsylvania treatment center for over users generated interest in the Subject .Theres still no consensus on how much time online constitutes too much or Whether addiction is possible. But as reliance on the Web grows .there are signs that the question is getting mores Last month , a study published in CNS Spectrums claims to be the first large-scale look at excessive Internet use. The American Psychiatric Association may consider listing Internet addiction in the next edition of its diagnostic manual. And scores of online discussion boards have popped up on which people discuss negative experiences tied to too much time on the Web.
