章节摘录

"The boys mother ran toward me from across the park , " Stella says. "I thought she was coming over to apologize , but instead she started shouting at me for disciplining her child All I did was let him know his behavior was unacceptable. Was I supposed to sit back while her kid did whatever he wanted , hurting other children in the process ?

" Getting your own children to play nice is difficult enough. Dealing with other peoples children has become a minefield. In my house , , jumping on the sofa is not allowed. In my sisters house its encouraged. For her , its about kids being kids : you cant do it at three , when can you do it ?

Each of these philosophies is valid and , it has to be said , my son loves visiting his aunts house. But I find myself saying "no" a lot when her kids are over at mine , Thats OK between sisters but becomes dangerous territory when youre talking to the children of friends or acquaintances. "Kids arent all raised the same , " agrees Professor Naomi White of Monash University. "But theres still an idea that theyre the property of the parents. We see our children as an extension of ourselves , so if youre saying that my child is behaving inappropriately , then thats somehow a criticism of me. " In those circumstances , its difficult to know whether to approach the child directly or the parent first. There are two schools of thought. "Id go to the child first , " says Andrew Fuller , author of Tricky Kids. "Usually a quiet reminder that we dont do that here is enough. Kids have finely tuned antennae (直觉) for how to behave in different settings. " He points out that bringing it up with the parent first may make them feel neglectful , which could cause problems. Of course , approaching the child first can bring its own headaches , too. This is why White recommends that you approach the parents first. "Raise your concerns with the parents if theyre there and ask them to deal with it , " she says. Asked how to approach a parent in this situation , psychologist Meredith Fuller answers : "Explain your needs as well as stressing the importance of the friendship. Preface your remarks with something like : I know youll think Im silly but in my house ! dont want... "
