章节摘录

版权页：插图： How innovations start The top question famed innovators hear is ""How did you start ? ""It's the beginnings that drive our curiosity: when did Edison get the idea for the lightbulb, or how did the Google founders envision a better search engine ?

Everyone wants to know where the magic happened, and since they can't imagine the magic sprinkled across years of work, they assume it's a secret-a tangible, singular element hiding behind the start. Like our endless quest to explain the origins of things, we're prone to seeking magic in beginnings. It's this desire that leads otherwise bright minds to research Michael Jordan's breakfast, da Vinci's or Einstein's napping habits, or Linus Torvalds' (founder of Linux) chosen style of underwear.² The irrelevance of these details is obvious here in the logical confines of this book, but we've all considered similarly ridiculous questions about someone we admire. I once researched which typewriter Hemingway had and which inks Shakespeare used to pen his plays. Dreams don't run on logic: when we follow our emotions, we find both amazing and ridiculous things, and it takes time to sort one from the other, or to realize they are one and the same. The eventual problem with excessive, dreamy curiosity is that-instead of making our own beginnings, right here and now-we seek to reuse others' proven magic. We try to borrow their beginnings and retrofit them into our lives. Of course, still safe in this book, we know details from others' experiences are unlikely to be pivotal in our own--what worked for them, during their era, won't necessarily work for anyone else. For example, imagine that Alexander the Great was born in Iceland or Steve Jobs in medieval France--how well would their ""magic"" work in those environments ?

There are countless factors in any success story, and only some belong to the innovators as individuals. Bo Peabody, venture capitalist and founder of Tripod (the eighth largest website in 1998) wrote, ""Luck is a part of life, and everybody, at one point or another, gets lucky. But luck is a big part of business life and perhaps the biggest part of entrepreneurial life. Acknowledging the uncontrollable factors helps divorce us from worshipping the details of our heroes' achievements. Studying history grants power, but only when we overcome romance and see innovators as humans just like us with similar limitations and circumstantial influences.

“精致，简单、有力：一本关于创新的具有创新性的书。

”——Don Norman 《Design of Everyday Things》作者 “富有思想性，具有逆向思维，而且读起来很棒。

”——Richard Saul Wurman，TED会议的创始人 “用智慧、真相和权威辨析了关于想法从哪里来的错误观念。

这本书将改变你对发明的想法——永远地。

”——Lifehacker.com “富有洞察力、令人鼓舞、发人深思和读起来很有趣的书。

而最棒的是这本书深入了创新的内心以及创新面对的各种挑战。

总体来说非常了不起。

”——Jone Seely Brown，前施乐Palo Alto研究中心（PARC）总监 “伯昆的书充满深刻的见解，佐以历史实例，不仅揭示了关于创新流传广泛的神话的谬误之处，也指明了如何让你的新想法更现实可行。

即使在今天超级繁忙的商业世界里，花点时间阅读本书也是非常值得的。

”——Tom Kelley，IDEO总经理，《The Ten Faces of Innovation》的作者
