章节摘录

版权页：插图： Under the influence of different geography environments, life styles, customs and different cultural values, the East and West are different in their ways of thinking. Let us examine some more phenomena: A Chinese teacher is teaching in a class. He is talkative and expressive. Everyone listens to him interestingly. Suddenly, he stops and asks students a question. However, the students don't know the answer, so they stay quiet. The teacher gets angry but has no idea of what's wrong with students' behavior. This scene often happens in Chinese classrooms. But Westerners believe that keeping silent is not good while interacting with others. Even if you don't understand, you should say something instead of keeping silent, as it is regarded as rude and impolite. The reason lies in that the East and the West have different ways of thinking. The Eastern people are conservative, introvert and inactive, and they put more emphasis on harmony; while the Western people are more open-minded, extrovert and active. They like changeable life and thus emphasize on competition. In this way, different ways of thinking lead to their different understanding on each other's behaviors. Chinese see somebody who is talkative as showing himself off in front of people. In China, we seldom see a couple making close contact in public. They are always walking side by side in a certain distance. While in the West, the couple are free and open to show that they are a couple. Even when they meet the acquaintances, they always give them a hug or kiss as greeting. Controversially, Chinese will only shake hands with their friends but seldom hug. They don't kiss others as they regard it as an intimate action between husband and wife. The reason why people in the East and the West behave so differently is that people in the East emphasize on ethic principle and morality. The Westerners focus more on freedom, democracy and individualism.
