章节摘录

The gunman agreed. After she was safely out of the car, Mr Brown started the engine and drove down the street. He was driving slowly but his mind was racing. Unarmed and 81 years old, he knew he could not fight the gunman. Suddenly Mr Brown realized how he could attract the attention of the police. He began driving like a mad man. He drove sixty miles an hour on side streets, ran red lights, and drove the wrong way on one-way streets. But not one police officer saw him. Suddenly he remembered that the Lilly police station was only a few blocks away. "All right," he thought. "If I can't bring the police to my car, I'll bring my car to the police."

He turned around the corner and saw the police station ahead. The two large doors were closed. He sped up the car straight for the doors. The car crashed through the doors and stopped in the countryside. Mr Brown cried, "Help! He is going to kill me." It happened so quickly that the gunman didn't know what to do. Just then the officers from the police station had already come. They quickly caught the gunman. It was 6:30 P.m.—only 35 minutes after the Browns left their daughter's home on a quiet street in Lilly.
