章节摘录

John A. Thain never said that turning around Merrill Lynch would be easy. "We have not seen the bottom," he declared in December, when he took the reins of the troubled Wall Street giant. But not even Mr. Thain expected Merrill, the nations largest brokerage firm, to go downhill so fast or so far. On Thursday, Merrill reported its fourth consecutive quarterly loss, a $ 4.9 billion deficit that exceeded even the most pessimistic forecasts.

The numbers are staggering. During the past 12 months, Merrill, known for its "Thundering Herd" of stockbrokers, has lost about $192 billion, which works out to about $52 million a day. It suffered $9.7 billion of write-downs in its latest quarter, bringing its charges to more than $41 billion since the credit crisis first flared last summer. It is quite a comedown for Mr. Thain, 53, who won praise for revitalizing the embattled New York Stock Exchange before taking the top job at Merrill. The firms problems underscore how bankers and policy makers are struggling to contain the damage to the financial system and the broader economy caused by the collapse of housing-related debt. "Im generally a very optimistic guy, but this is as difficult a market environment as Ive seen in my entire career," Mr. Thain said in an interview Thursday evening.
