章节摘录

Bring Our Schools out of the 20th Century      There ' S a dark little joke exchanged by educators with an opposing trace : Rip Van Winkle awakens in the 21 century after a hundred—year sleep and is , of course , utterly bewildered by what he sees . Men and women dash about , talking to small metal devices attached to their ears . Young people sit at home on sofas . moving miniature athletes around on electronic screens . Older folk defy death and disability with devices in their chests and with hips made of metal and plastic . Airports , hospitals , shopping malls—every place Rip goes just baffles him . But when he finally walks into a schoolroom , the old man knows exactly where he is . “ This is a school , ” he declares . “ We used to have these back in 1906 . Only now the blackboards are green . ”      American schools aren ' t exactly frozen in time , but considering the pace of change in other areas of life , our public schools tend to feel like throwbacks . Kids spend much of the day as their grandparents once did : sitting in rows , listening to teachers ' lecture , scribbling notes by hand , reading from textbooks that are out of date by the time they are printed . A yawning gap separates the world inside the schoolhouse from the world outside .      For the past five years , the national conversation on education has focused on reading scores , math tests and closing the “ achievement gap ” between social classes . This is not a story about that conversation . This is a story about the big public conversation the nation is not having about education , the one that will ultimately determine not merely whether some fraction of our children get “ left behind ” but also whether an entire generation of kids will fail to make the grade in the global economy because they can ' t think their way through abstract problems , work in teams , distinguish good information from bad or speak a language other than English .      Right now we ' re aiming too low . Competency in reading and math is just the minimum . Scientific and technical skills are , likewise , utterly necessary but insufficient . Today ' S economy demands not only a high . level competence in the traditional academic disciplines but also what might be called 21st century skills .
